

LITERATURE.

LESLIE'S POPULAR MONTHLY.
The great excellence and the remarkable cheapness of this periodical have secured for it deservedly an immense circulation. The October number is exceedingly interesting, entertaining, and full of general information. "England's Only Living General" (Sir Garnet Wolseley), by Alfred H. Guernsey, is an admirable and timely article. It has seventeen illustrations. Among other notable, profusely illustrated articles are: "A Visit to the Phosphate Fields and Hills," "A Visit to Palermo," "The Last King of Taormina," "The Mariner's Compass," by Wm. Durham, etc., etc. A new serial by M. T. Calder, "A Whited Sepulchre," promises to be deeply interesting. "The Letter 'S'; Or, The Jocelyn Sin," is concluded; and there are short stories, sketches, etc., by S. A. Weiss, A. E. Barr, Marguerite S. Aymer, etc.; poems (mostly reprinted) by popular writers, and a miscellany embracing a large variety of subject, affording very delightful and instructive reading. The embellishments are even more than usually numerous, and are meritorious works of art; the colored title-page, "The Sultan and his Attendant," is very beautiful.

HOW TO LIVE; or, the Philosophy of Housekeeping. By Joseph B. Lyman, an agricultural editor of the New York Tribune, and Laura E. Lyman, author of the agricultural price essay on "House-keeping, etc.," Philadelphia: W. H. Thompson, Salt Lake: F. J. Munson & Co., general agents for standard subscription books. Price $2.

This is not a cook book as the title would indicate, but a manual for the housekeeper, showing her how to ascertain the analysis and comparative value of various kinds of food, its preparation for the table, the best mode of preserving articles of diet, proper care of health, remedies in sickness, and the proper performance of household duties generally. It contains a full appendix of recipes. The prospectus says this work is intended to help the poor to rise out of poverty, and instruct those who have a competency, how to derive from it all the comfort and happiness possible. It is designed to make every home the centre of all that is most highly prized in domestic and social life. The advantage that may be derived from the reading of any one of these chapters are worth the price of the volume. It is not a sensation story, nor a re-hash of miscellaneous writers, but springs directly from the study, the experience, and the wide observation of its authors.

A COMPENDIUM OF THE DOCTRINES OF THE GOSPEL. Franklin D. Richards, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and Elder James A. Little, compilers and publishers. Salt Lake: Deseret News Company.

This is a compendium of the Bible, Book of Mormon, Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and Pearl of Great Price, designed specially for the use and convenience of the Elders of the Mormon Church. The work is elaborate, and will undoubtedly be of great assistance to those needing such a help.

FILE AND FOUND AT BLAZING STAR. By Bret Harte, Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.; Salt Lake: James Dwyer. Price, $1.

Two novels, the latest contributions to current literature, of Bret Harte. Like so many of his writings they are California tales, and the two women characters that he creates, Flip and Miss Porter, being exclusively to the Pacific Coast. Flip is noticeable for freckles and slang, and is an altogether entertaining person who should not have gone from the world in the manner provided for her by the author. We think that in this story Mr. Harte has equaled his best work of the past. The plot of "Found at Blazing Star" is not intricate, and the story ends in true romantic fashion. The book ought to be popular.

WIDE AWAKE.
The young people have a rich treat in the October issue of Wide Awake, which is brimful of good things. The tales are wondrous in their attractions, and all by the most popular writers of juvenile literature. The winter now setting in, it is a good time to present young friends with a year's subscription to Wide Awake.

Theatre.

Last night a packed house witnessed the performance of "Jessie Brown," at the Theatre. The performance was very successful, and was enthusiastically applauded by the audience. All the characters were well played—those sustained by the old favorites, as well as those placed in the hands of the younger artists. Miss Dunbar as Jessie Brown, was admirable. The young lady has appeared but a few times, yet she has marked ability, and gave the pretty part with a vim and force such as won the favor of the audience. The whole affair was a success.

On Monday night the same company will produce "Not Guilty." This is practically a new piece, having been played here but once, a number of years ago. It is of the sensational order, and tells how a man is charged and convicted of a theft of which he is not guilty, but against whom the combination of circumstances is seemingly strong. The real thief escapes for years, but is finally discovered and brought to justice, and the denouement is as happy as could be desired. It is to this piece that the combination has devoted nearly all its attention, so as to make the production one which can be witnessed with great pleasure, and there is no doubt that the efforts of the combination will be successful, and that a full house will be present.

"Abandoned to Fate."

The entertainment at the Walker Opera House last evening drew out a very good-sized audience, notwithstanding the decided attractions elsewhere. The affair was new and novel in this section, being a monologue in three acts and five tableaux; and while it is not of a character which would draw here, the piece itself is a very excellent one, and Dr. Haas' acting was excellent in some places, drawing out decided applause, particularly in the second act. The Careless orchestra and Croxall's band added considerably to the pleasure of the entertainment.

The Sultan's Seraglio.

A Constantinople correspondent has been inquiring into the Sultan's extensive household arrangements and gives some curious particulars. He says the seraglio buildings stretch to the length of a mile and a half, and contain more than three thousand inmates. Here the government of the empire is carried on chiefly by women and children. The viziers and ministers are but the servants of these secluded creatures, and although at times a statesman, supported by a strong palace clique, may wield real power, he seldom does so long, nor is his power very great. From the moment when he enters office he is assailed by a host of enemies whom he does not see and whom he cannot disarm or propitiate. All he knows is that while these foes are intriguing against him, the women and slaves, to whose influence he owed his place, are fighting for him and so long as they keep the upper hand he is safe. As for the Sultan, as a rule he is as much at their mercy as his ministers. A puppet in the hands of women he never knows exactly who rules him, but is obliged, for peace's sake, to do as his mother, sisters, kadias or favorites order. More than one Sultan, wearied to death with seraglio intrigues, would have been glad to make a clean sweep of his female court, but any step in this direction would have led to conspiracy and deposition. The seraglio—for there are two, the new one, where the court of the reigning Sultan resides, and the old one, to which the favorites of departed sultans are relegated—harbor between them some four thousand persons, and are sources of ruinous expense to the treasury. Not only are the allowances of the sultanas, kadias, ikbals (favorites), and guides, (aspirant favorites) large, but the ways of the palace are extravagant. Each of the imperial ladies has her diara, or retinue of companions and male and female servants; and all these people scatter gold about without counting whenever they have a whim to satisfy. Sultans do not contract regular marriages, and the reigning lady at the seraglio is never the husband's wife, but his mother. She bears the title of Sultana Valide, and all the inmates of the seraglio owe her servile obedience. Her household consists of about 200 servants and guards. Next to her comes the Hasnadar Ousta, or mistress of the treasury, who is generally a shrewd old woman, promoted from the ranks of domesticity for her talents in gossip and housekeeping. If the Sultana Valide dies the Hasnadar succeeds her as queen of the seraglio. After the Hasnadar comes the Sultan's semi-lawful wives and favorites in the following order: First, the four kadias, who rank as spouses until his majesty divorces them and gives them in marriage to some pasha, which he does pretty often; then the ikbals, or favorites, to the number of five or six, and then the aspirant favorites, whose number is unlimited. As everyone who marries from the seraglio takes with her her clothes, jewels, furniture, servants, carriage and a lump sum in money, which often amounts to thousands of dollars, it may be imagined how the civil list is mulcted when there are many aspirant favorites. Coming to the male members of the seraglio, we find, in addition to the necessary staff of chamberlains, secretaries, guards, eunuchs, scullions and cooks, a corps of 200 pages and musicians, and a very large army of barbers, shampoos, masters of the Sultan's food, athletes, buffoons, cock-fighters, ram-fighters, astrologers and grooms. The cock-fighters and ram-fighters were appointed to amuse Abdul Aziz, but they have been maintained by the present Sultan because it is almost impossible to dismiss anyone who has once held office in the palace without giving him a pension. The same may be said of the astrologers, whose functions have become a sinecure, although they are occasionally summoned into the harem to entertain the ladies by fortune-telling. As for the buffoons and dwarfs, they have always been numerous, for ladies living in seclusion must be made to laugh when time hangs heavy on their hands and when the music and jiggling of the dancing girls form a corps 300 strong, and as they are splendidly kept and richly fed they cost more to keep than a cavalry regiment.—New York Sun.

The "Contributor."

No. 1, Volume IV, of the Contributor, has been received. This popular magazine has grown with singular rapidity. The present number is more than one-fourth the usual size, and is filled with matter of a choice literary order and in a variety of interesting topics. It also contains an engraving of the late President George A. Smith, which is probably as fine a thing of the kind as has ever been done for the use of a Utah periodical. The present magazine contains forty pages, the usual number being a little over thirty.
